

CANCER AT FIRST

It was a frigged cold day . My mom just had a normal doctors appointment. But the words just and normal weren't exact-ally the words to use for this appointment. I on the other hand was at school having a great day. Until I got home and it turned to one of the worst days not just of my childhood but of my whole life. I thought I was hit by an earthquake. My mom got cancer. It was one year later when she was in remission. And I was so gleefully happy.

But that did not last long because a year later it struck again. The cancer was back and stronger then before. I thought it was really strange and a joke at first but let me tell you It's not at all a joke. I also didn't know that 5 years later she would be in hospice and every night setting out a pair of jeans in case we get "THE CALL" I hope we never get that call every day I'm up thinking what if tonight's THE NIGHT. That's why when I can be there I'll be there. She doesn't make my basketball games but I know she will be there in spirit always and all other sports events . I will always love my mom and she is WMVM and I can here the words in my head WMVS . I love to just sit on the couch and think of all the great times I have had with my mom from sledding in the sparkling snow to playing football catch in the sun .going golfing ,swimming, hopping in the car and going to panera bread,and she gave me the most thrilling birthday party's . My mom always tells me to never quit . And that's the one it should come from my mom Sally . She is my role model and will always be my role model forever. Happy b-day 2010!
